And last but not least, we're excited about the return to the powerful, intelligent, and resilient mesh features provided by the Point Cloud Shaders. These shaders are part of the revamped UI that was introduced in the November release of Photoshop. With Point Cloud Shaders you will be able to create intricate mirror, reflective, or transparent effects that were impossible until the release of the Point Cloud Shaders. The industry-standard Adobe tools have been used to create many of the images we see on this site. However, we now have the ability to open our files in Photoshop, and make some incredible retouching effects. The Retouch feature is one of the main attractions. Photoshop Retouch makes quick work of removing wrinkles and other imperfections from your favorites. linking your favorite images in your favorite project in Bridge, and then taking an image from your blog or website and adding it into a project. Utilizing the Neural Filters and the Multicamera composite features will help your design become even more striking. It is hoped that these tools can be used to create some very memorable images while also having the ease-of-use benefits of being able to work directly within Photoshop. In the past couple of years, we've seen some spectacular creations come out of the talented artists of MindsEye Studios. It was always amazing to see the final versions of these incredible works of art. Now, thanks to the new native 2D and 3D APIs and the wide range of Substance tools like the Directional Surface shaders and the Point Cloud Shaders, we have access to these incredible creations once again. We're excited to see what artists will create in the future!
