To start, you load the image into the software¦so cold and boring!¦but once it has loaded, you square off to it with "about face" and begin to examine the image. The window will not let you view the entire photo simultaneously. If you would like to zoom in close, up, or out, you must do so there. Clicking "fit" will zoom in so that only the appropriate portion of the image is visible. It is a neat feature, but it makes for some awkward viewing. You might want to zoom in for a close examination of a part of your photo, but then you end up with a window that doesn't allow you to browse through the rest of that photograph. So, twice you'll have to do work, once for a zoom in, and once for the fit. It makes for a lot of time spent in re-zoom-ins.
